I HAVE ALREADY RUN YOUR CUSTOMER — ONE LIFE STAGE LATER

I spent two years as B2C E-Commerce & Digital Marketing Manager at Baby Central, Hong Kong's #1 baby e-commerce platform. Your customer is my customer, caught a few months earlier: the same anxious, research-heavy, high-trust purchase, made by someone who reads every review before spending and tells other mothers afterwards.

Three of your bullets are not adjacent to what I have done. They are the same thing:

"Email flows." I owned a 30,000-subscriber Klaviyo programme — twice-weekly campaigns plus automated welcome, abandoned cart, post-purchase and win-back flows, segmented by purchase stage and category behaviour. Those are the four flows, by name.

"Creator and UGC coordination (samples, briefs, payments, ingestion)." I built and ran a 200+ KOL and influencer programme across Hong Kong and SEA — sourcing, briefing standards, output review, and rejecting work before it reached a client. In a maternity-adjacent category, where a careless claim is a liability.

"Ads readiness." HK$500K+/month across Meta and Google at 3–7x ROAS, plus HK$3M+ cumulative across 20+ DTC brands. I know what "ready" means because I was the one who found out at 9am that it wasn't.

"Daily Claude or GPT use with at least one AI workflow you can show us." I have been running AI-assisted marketing production commercially since 2022 — prompt libraries per deliverable type, reusable templates, a named quality gate on every output. Production time cut ~60%, testing cycles cut ~50%, measured before and after. I will not describe it; I will screen-share it.

THE TWO THINGS ON YOUR "YOU'RE NOT" LIST THAT POINT AT ME

You wrote a disqualifier list. I read it. Two items describe me, and pretending otherwise would waste a week of your time.

"Side agency owner"

Yes — today. I run a freelance consulting book at HK$13,800/month packages, and I publish a Cantonese content channel, @aieasyjob.

What happens if you hire me: the consulting book closes or transfers. I am not looking for a client to slot between other clients — after eight years of running my own book I want one thing to build properly, which is precisely why an operating-playbook mandate is what I applied for. @aieasyjob stays as a personal content channel — it is where I test what I know publicly, it has no clients and no service obligations, and it is the reason my AI workflow claim is verifiable rather than asserted. If you would rather it paused too, say so and we can settle that before an offer, not after.

I would rather you screen me out on this now than discover a divided commitment in month two.

"2-4 years"

I have eight. I am not going to shrink it, because that is the third way to land on your disqualifier list.

Here is what I think your list is actually protecting against, since you wrote both of these in the same ad:

> "The spine to chase vendors without founder backup."

> "Calm in founder-led chaos."

Neither of those is a two-year skill. They are what you get from years of having nobody to escalate to — which is what freelancing 20+ concurrent accounts for three years teaches you and very little else does. What your list is genuinely screening out is divided attention and enterprise slowness. I have addressed the first above. On the second: I have never worked anywhere with a procurement department, a change board, or a legal queue. My entire record is small teams and my own name on the invoice.

And I am applying to be levelled where the role sits, not where my CV sits. The salary range at the end of this document is my honest ask; if your band is below it, tell me the number and I will tell you straight away whether it works. No negotiation theatre.

WHERE I WOULD BE LEARNING — STATED NOW

Asana specifically, I have not built. I have built workspaces from scratch in Notion — client workspaces, briefing templates, QC checklists, campaign calendars, approval states. The transferable part is knowing what a workspace has to do: that a task with no owner and no date is decoration, that review cycles need explicit states or they become Slack threads, and that a workspace nobody updates is worse than no workspace. Porting that into Asana is a week.

CRO QA as a formal discipline with a specialist. I have run conversion work and landing-page optimisation to result — +200% conversion rate through structured single-variable testing — but I have not sat in a QA loop with a dedicated CRO agency. I know what I would need from them (hypothesis, variant spec, sample-size floor, kill criteria, and a definition of "shipped" that includes tracking verification) and I would want that agreed in writing in week one, but the muscle memory of that specific handoff is new to me.

PDP and web build QA with a dev contractor. Shopify I know as a merchant and a marketer. Structured build QA — acceptance criteria, cross-device checks, a defect log that closes — I would be establishing rather than inheriting.

SELECTED EVIDENCE

Ran the connective tissue for a baby e-commerce marketing engine

Baby Central Limited / Bloom and Grow Limited, Hong Kong's #1 baby e-commerce platform, HK and SEA. Simultaneously: HK$500K+/month paid media, a 30,000-subscriber lifecycle programme on a twice-weekly cadence, a 200+ creator programme, GA4 and Meta dashboards reported monthly to senior stakeholders, and delivery across product, design, development, operations and merchandising.

HK$300K incremental GMV in five months. 30% organic traffic growth. 3–7x ROAS held throughout.

Nothing in that list ran itself, and none of it was allowed to slip. That is the job you are describing.

Held 20+ concurrent DTC clients for three years, alone

Freelance, Nov 2018 – Dec 2021. HK$3M+ cumulative ad spend at 3–7x ROAS. Every account sourced, scoped, delivered, reported and renewed by me — including chasing suppliers, chasing approvals, and chasing invoices with nobody behind me.

"The spine to chase vendors without founder backup" is not an aspiration on my CV. It was the only way the work got done.

Built the AI production system, then documented it so it transferred Introduced generative AI into commercial creative and campaign production at Baby Central in 2022, roughly two years ahead of general adoption. Built as a system, not a habit: prompt libraries, reusable templates, QC gates. Output rose to 10+ campaign variants per testing cycle while holding single-variable discipline so every result stayed attributable to one change.

My standard for any workflow I build: someone in their second week produces output at the same standard without asking me. An undocumented AI process is a single point of failure wearing the costume of an advantage.

This is the SOP instinct your first-90-days list is asking for, applied to the hardest thing to systematise.

Enforced standards on other people's output, without authority over them

The 200+ creator programme, in detail: sourcing and vetting, briefing standards written to be followed by people who had never worked with us, sample logistics, output review against those standards, and the unpopular part — rejecting work before a client saw it. Trust-sensitive category, so a careless claim was a liability rather than an inconvenience.

Your creator bullet lists samples, briefs, payments and ingestion. I have run all four at a scale of 200, which is where a process either exists or collapses.

Built organic distribution from nothing, twice

@aieasyjob — Cantonese content brand, 58 films written, directed and cut solo, eight of them in the last month. One Facebook Reel reached 76,000 organic views from a page with 77 followers, zero paid support; a second, built the same way, reached 11,000, which is what tells you the first was structural rather than luck.

One honest correction before you look, because your category runs on credibility: my channel's lifetime view total is large, but roughly 60% of it comes from a single Japanese anime music cover, while the AI and marketing films sit in the hundreds to low thousands. I am deliberately not using the aggregate as evidence. The two Reel figures are the ones that hold up. I would rather hand you the unflattering number than have you find it.

FIRST 90 DAYS — AGAINST YOUR OWN SHIP LIST

You said the first 90 days ship a launch playbook, CRO QA checklist, creator payment SOP, vendor report cadence, and creative brief workflow. Here is how I would sequence those, and why in that order.

Weeks 1–2 — map the current state before writing any SOP. Every live vendor: what they own, what they owe, when, and where the last three handoffs slipped. An SOP written before you know the actual failure points is documentation theatre. I would also want one number per vendor — what we pay and what it produced — because that reframes every later prioritisation argument.

Weeks 2–4 — creative brief workflow and creator payment SOP first. These are the two that bleed daily and cost the least to fix. A brief template with mandatory fields (objective, audience, claim boundaries, deliverable spec, review states, deadline) and a payment process with a single intake point and a defined turnaround. Creators forgive a small fee; they do not forgive being chased for their own money.

Weeks 4–8 — launch playbook, built from a real launch, not in the abstract. I would rather run the next launch with a rough checklist and write the playbook from what actually broke than produce a beautiful document that describes an imaginary launch. Kickoff gate, asset deadlines working backwards from live date, dependency map, go/no-go criteria, and a named owner per lane.

Weeks 6–10 — CRO QA checklist, agreed with the specialist. Written jointly, or it will not be honoured: hypothesis, variant spec, sample-size floor, kill criteria, tracking verification before launch, and a shared definition of "shipped". The checklist's job is to stop us learning nothing from a test that ran with broken tracking.

Weeks 8–12 — vendor report cadence, one page per vendor. Same shape for everyone, same day each month, populated from source rather than from the vendor's own narrative. Not for the vendors — for the co-founder, so a spend decision takes ten minutes instead of a week of chasing.

Throughout — bring options, not questions. Two or three, with a recommendation and what it costs. Founder-led chaos gets worse when the operator's contribution is more decisions to make.

AVAILABILITY & PACKAGE

Current: HK$40,600 per month — self-employed consulting income. Gross, and excluding employer MPF contribution, paid annual leave and medical coverage, so not directly comparable to a permanent package.

Expected: HK$48,000 – 54,000 per month base, excluding bonus. Morgan McKinley's 2026 Hong Kong reference point for a Digital Marketing Manager is HK$55,000 per month, and this range sits under it to reflect that this is an operations and orchestration remit rather than channel ownership. I am aware this is a Hong Kong cost base against a remote-APAC role — if your band is set regionally, tell me the number early and I will give you a straight answer rather than three rounds of interviews. Flexible on how the role is levelled and on total package.

Availability: 2 weeks from agreed terms.

Location: Hong Kong. Remote suits me and I have worked this way for two years; fully overlapping APAC hours.
