POSITIONING

I write Cantonese that was born in Cantonese — thought in the language, for this audience, with Hong Kong specifics load-bearing rather than decorative.

For two years I have run @aieasyjob, a Cantonese brand whose entire editorial premise is taking something genuinely difficult and making a person feel capable of doing it by Monday morning. Fifty-eight pieces, weekly, solo — concept, script, direction, edit, publish. Alongside it, eight years of performance marketing: HK$3M+ cumulative ad spend at 3–10x ROAS, peaking at HK$500K+/month at Hong Kong's #1 baby e-commerce platform.

That combination is the whole pitch: someone who writes for feeling and gets marked on revenue.

WHERE I SIT AGAINST YOUR SPEC — STATED PLAINLY

Your requirement	Me
Mastery in Cantonese, non-negotiable	Native, writing-grade. My channel is named 廣東話 AI 實測
Trilingual, spoken and written	Cantonese native · English fluent · Mandarin fluent
Complexity into simple, compelling stories	My entire craft — two years of public, dated, inspectable evidence — see Narrative Craft
Write for performance without losing your soul	HK$3M+ managed spend, 3–10x ROAS, +200% conversion lift. I have never had the luxury of creative that doesn't work
Build systems, not just ads	Tone frameworks, prompt architecture, publishable formula templates — see Systems
AIGC and AI-assisted creative workflows	In commercial production since 2022 , roughly two years before the industry
Filmic storytelling — on set, in the edit	I direct, storyboard, control dialogue, camera and performance, and cut it myself — see Selected Work

What I do not bring, and will not dress up.

I have never held a Creative Director or ACD title, and I have not led a creative team. My track is marketing and performance, not agency creative. I have briefed and directed freelancers, designers, editors and 200+ creator partners, and set and enforced craft standards — but on deliverables, not as the person junior creatives report to. If people grow under you is the non-negotiable, I am not that person yet.

Your spec asks for someone who can raise a bar that does not currently exist, in Cantonese, in a regulated category, while writing for performance and working fluently with AI production. I can do four of those five at a level that is hard to hire. The fifth I would be growing into, in public, with the team watching.

Also honest: eight years, not ten. No OOH or on-ground activation. No broadcast TVC with a live crew and a client in the room.

THE PROOF THAT MATTERS MOST

A Facebook Reel that reached 76,000 organic views from a page with 77 followers — roughly 990x follower count, about 210x page median, zero paid support. A second Reel on the same structural approach reached 11,000, which is how I know it was structure rather than a lucky roll.

I lead with this rather than a channel total because it is the cleanest available test of writing craft: no audience, no budget, no distribution advantage. Only the first frame, the opening beat, and where the payoff lands.

Since you will look: my YouTube view total is dominated by non-AI content — an anime music cover accounts for most of it, and the AI work performs in the hundreds to low thousands. I am not presenting the channel as an audience asset. It is a laboratory and a body of work, and should be judged on the work.

NARRATIVE CRAFT — MAKING COMPLEXITY FEEL SIMPLE

Your brief: turning financial complexity into simple, compelling stories — if people don't understand it, they won't trust it.

That is what I have done weekly for two years, in Cantonese, on a subject people find intimidating and slightly humiliating to admit they don't understand. Money and AI share that property. People do not disengage because a topic is hard. They disengage because nobody told them where to put their hands.

THE METHOD, IN FOUR MOVES

1. Find the real point of failure, not the obvious one.

The obvious diagnosis is "the tool is complicated." It almost never is. People stall at the first irreversible-feeling decision — where a wrong choice feels expensive. Writing that opens on the feature loses them; writing that opens on the hesitation keeps them.

2. Name one enemy, not five.

One of my stronger pieces reduced a whole category of AI failure to a single culprit and a single fix — 一個全域指令根治AI幻覺問題. Not a survey of causes. One enemy, one move.

3. Make the promise structural, and put it in the title.

The recurring vocabulary across my work is deliberate: 零 Code · 0 基礎 · 一鍵搞掂 · 完整教學 · 附公式範本 · 含 prompt 下載. Each is a promise about the shape of the effort, not the quality of the outcome. "Zero code" is not a feature claim — it removes the reader's main excuse. Where the audience's default state is this isn't for me, dismantling that is the copy's first job.

4. Ship the artifact, not just the explanation.

Most explanatory work ends at understanding. Mine ends at a downloadable formula — a template, a prompt, a fill-in structure. The artifact is the proof the simplification actually holds. Anyone can make a hard thing sound easy; handing over something that works is a different claim.

SUBSTANTIATION, BECAUSE CLAIMS HAVE TO SURVIVE SCRUTINY

I don't assert that something is better. I build a test and publish the conditions.

- 13 Hong Kong local scenarios, head-to-head, to settle which of two competing tools actually won — and the answer contradicted the expected one, which is exactly why the piece worked
- 7 original commercial-grade tests rather than one flattering demo
- 880-word prompt versus 380-word prompt, same subject, published difference — one variable isolated so the finding is attributable

This matters more in a regulated category than an unregulated one: claims that arrive with their method attached survive both a skeptical reader and a compliance review. And rigour is usually what makes the work interesting — the tension in the cheaper version beat the flagship only exists because the test was real.

PERFORMANCE DISCIPLINE, WITHOUT GOING BEIGE

Eight years of paid media means engagement has never been my finish line. I read work down the funnel — hook rate → CTR → CVR → CPA → ROAS — and retire creative that wins attention and dies at conversion. But it runs the other way too: the highest-converting work I have made was never the safest. The 0.3x-to-3x turnaround came from moving 70% of budget to cold audiences and rebuilding the creative, not from optimising a winner's headline. Safety was the thing that was failing.

Compliance is the same trade, and I think the same answer holds: a constraint is a brief. "We cannot promise a return" is not a reason for beige copy — it is an instruction to build the feeling somewhere other than the promise.

SELECTED WORK

CANTONESE BRAND FILM — SELF-INITIATED, DIRECTED END TO END

Concepted, storyboarded, scripted, directed, voiced and cut by me. These are not client campaigns and I won't pretend otherwise — they are films made to solve craft problems, with Hong Kong cultural specifics doing the work.

A Hong Kong skincare commercial, in Cantonese. Built an original brand-grade model, wrote and directed Cantonese dialogue and voiceover, held character consistency across a nine-frame grid, then extended it into motion. The problem being solved: whether a premium beauty register survives in Cantonese without sliding into translated-English cadence.

A five-minute Cantonese period drama. Original characters, storyboard developed with AI-assisted script structuring, precise control of dialogue, camera language and performance across a full narrative arc. My strongest long-form piece, and the one that taught me most about pacing a Cantonese scene.

MEOW Telecom — a fictional Hong Kong 5G brand. A campaign built around a shop-assistant character, Cantonese lip-synced dialogue, delivered in a TVB interview format. Both the joke and the credibility depend on the audience recognising the format instantly. That recognition is the entire mechanism, and it does not translate.

A Hong Kong convenience-store spot. An original uniformed character in a 7-Eleven-shaped setting, Cantonese interview dialogue, lip-sync and cross-shot consistency. Local specificity as load-bearing structure rather than set dressing.

Commercial-scale tests. A Nike-shaped brand film, to find how close AI production gets to broadcast register. A single-take UE5 VFX sequence, to find the ceiling on motion craft.

PERFORMANCE CREATIVE — CLIENT WORK, MEASURED

Rebuilt a failing account: ROAS 0.3x → 3x in 90 days. A fashion and lifestyle retailer with budget trapped in warm retargeting and a stale creative pool. I rebuilt the full funnel, moved 70% of spend into cold prospecting, and ran single-variable tests to isolate which hooks — not which audiences — were failing. Reaching 3x on a majority-prospecting split is materially harder than a retargeting-led lift: it proves net-new persuasion rather than harvesting demand that already existed.

+200% conversion rate through structured creative testing. Built a pipeline raising output to 10+ variants per cycle while holding single-variable discipline so results stayed attributable. Peak campaigns at 10x+ ROAS; cycle time down roughly 50%.

HK$500K+/month owned in a trust-gated category. At Baby Central, Hong Kong's #1 baby e-commerce platform, I led creative and performance across Meta and Google at consistent 3–7x ROAS through a high-growth scaling phase across HK and SEA — HK$300K incremental GMV in five months and 30% organic traffic growth. Parents, like investors, don't buy on price. They buy when they believe you, and the mechanics of earning that are the same.

A 200+ creator programme, built and run across Hong Kong and Southeast Asia — sourcing, briefing, standard-setting and quality control on other people's output at volume, in a category where a careless claim is a liability. Directly relevant wherever creator content carries brand and regulatory risk.

HK$3M+ across 20+ brands in retail, lifestyle and F&B — adapting register, voice and funnel architecture per brand and per sales cycle.

A 30,000-subscriber lifecycle programme in Klaviyo — welcome, abandoned cart, post-purchase, win-back. Long-cycle persuasion, written to be read repeatedly by the same person without wearing out.

SYSTEMS, AI PRODUCTION, AND HISTORY

Tone and structure frameworks. Reusable narrative structures with the decision logic written down — which opening move for which reader state, where the payoff lands, what gets cut — so a winner gets reapplied rather than re-derived next quarter.

Prompt architecture as production infrastructure. Chained multi-step workflows with conditional logic and enforced QC checklists — custom skills for competitor teardowns, brief generation, structural editing, automated carousel production — plus naming and version control across a growing library. The real test of whether a system exists is whether a stranger can run it, so mine ship as downloadable templates.

Introduced generative AI into commercial creative production in 2022, roughly two years ahead of general adoption. I teach it publicly, which is a harder test than using it privately.
